

OVER

At last, it is over.

You have made the decision, or it has been made for you. No more wringing of the hands. No more lying awake before dawn agonizing over the key decisions.

The dream has come to an end.

Uplift Aeronautics no longer exists. The Syria Airlift Project is over.

The hell of these last few months recedes like a thunderstorm on the bruised horizon. The wind still whips, the fierce rain still slants in your face, but you are through the worst of it. The first glimpses of blue sky crack through.

You are exhausted. You sleep untold hours, now that you can. You cry at the slightest thought. You pass through your days like a ghost.

It is tempting to think that failure is done with you, and that you will at last know some peace. But fortune is a trickster, and she is not yet ready to let you go.

You are not better.

You are simply unmoored.
